Most undergraduate residents will live at college for one/two years, before moving into share houses with other residents. Others find they enjoy college so much that they stay for their whole undergraduate degree, then keep living at college for graduate studies!

During SWOTVAC, the study week between semester time and the exam period, many colleges run a ‘Random act of kindness’ program, where residents are assigned another resident to leave small gifts for (usually in the form of chocolate)

The colleges house residents who are under 18 when they arrive at college. College provides a safe and supportive atmosphere for these students, who may need more guidance than those who are already 18

If you wish to defer your first year of university and take a gap year, many colleges allow you to defer your college place as well. Otherwise, you can apply once you have taken your gap year.
